

Screening for Domestic Violence

Primary Care

Within the managed care system, women are increasingly being seen in a primary care or obstetrician/gynecologist setting, which serves as their entry point into the health care system. The primary care visit offers a woman the chance to have a private conversation with her health care provider, where screening can be done in a less hectic setting than in the emergency department. The primary care setting also offers an opportunity to screen both women who present for routine health maintenance and those who are presenting for specific health complaints.

◆ Who should be screened for domestic violence?

⇒ All females aged fourteen years and older

◆ Who should screen for domestic violence?

At a minimum, screening should be conducted by a health care provider who:

- ⇒ Has been educated about the dynamics of domestic violence, the safety and autonomy of abused patients and cultural competency,
- ⇒ Has been trained how to ask about abuse and to intervene with identified victims of abuse,
- ⇒ Has the opportunity to speak to the patient in a private setting,
- ⇒ Is authorized to record in the main body of the patient's medical record.

Ideally, screening should be conducted by a health care provider who:

- ⇒ Establishes a relationship or some trust with the patient.

◆ How should screening occur?

At a minimum, screening for domestic violence should:

- ⇒ Be part of a face-to-face health care encounter,
- ⇒ Be direct and non-judgmental,
- ⇒ Take place in private; no friends or relative of the patient should be present during the screening and preferably no children over two should be present
- ⇒ Be confidential; patients should be told of the confidentiality of the conversation and told of the limits of that confidentiality
- ⇒ Use professional interpreters when needed, rather than a patient's friend or family member.

Ideally, screening for domestic violence should also:

- ⇒ Be included as part of the written health questionnaire
- ⇒ Be conducted in the patient's primary language
